Abstract:

The main goal of this empirical research was to define those crucial leadership characteristics and behaviours of experienced individuals that confirmed them as leaders in the Croatian transition economy, based on success of their entrepreneurial or social affirmations. The basic research question was: What is the empirical base for classifying leaders into homogeneous groups? To answer this question, three cluster analyses were conducted. Firstly, variables were grouped into six spheres: demography, achievement, privacy, business and self-perception. The second cluster analysis was based on subjective dimension of career development expectation. The third cluster analysis explained what presents confirmation of personal success.
